Introduction

As I began trying to learn to read the hieroglyphic writing of Middle Egyptian I was frustrated that all of the available dictionaries were organized around the approximate sounds of the words instead of their spelling, as is used in most other dictionaries.

When I learned that all of the raw material was available for making my own dictionary, organized the way I wanted, I set out on this project.

The definitions are organized in order by the Gardiner Codes of the glyphs that make them up. This system, developed by Alan Gardiner in the early part of the 20th century, groups the symbols into families according to what they look like.

A good way to use this dictionary is not to print it on paper but to leave it in your computer as a PDF file so that you have the full use of the SEARCH facilities of your PDF reader. With that you can look for words in the English definitions, or in the phonetic pronunciation guides. For the latter it helps to check the box for case-sensitive searching, since case is important in the MdC notation.

Credits

The original definitions, transliterations, and glyph sequences are by Mark Vygus, via Luca Brigatti's web site at <http://home.rockefeller.edu/~lucabri/CDME.rar>. The word lists are from Faulkner's dictionary and other sources.

Conversion from the absolute positioning notation Mark used to Manuel de Codage superposition/juxtaposition notation was by some PHP programs I wrote.

Creation of the body of the text and fixing up a few mistakes in the glyphs was done with Serge Rosmorduc's JSesh program, version 2.3.

Final layout and formatting was done in OpenOffice.org-2.0.

This dictionary is not yet finished. This version still has the following problems:

1. Some glyphs are missing because JSesh does not yet have all the necessary symbols. Usually the missing signs are variations on a simpler sign. This will require some work with Inkscape.
2. Due to deficiencies in my conversion program, the layout of signs within some words does not follow proper scribal practice in how small signs are placed together. This will require manual editing of the glyph codes.

Phonology

Most of the symbols in a typical Egyptian text represent sounds (actually, just consonants), and one symbol can represent one, two, or three consonants. All of the symbols used for this purpose are listed here, grouped by what they are a picture of to aid in recognition.

Definitions

The definitions are in order by the classification system developed by Gardiner in 19???. They are grouped into sections according to the classification of the first sign in the word, and then in the same order within sections.

For each word the following information is presented:

1. The hieroglyphic spelling
2. The phonetic spelling in MDC notation, enclosed in square brackets.
3. The part of speech (optional) in italics enclosed in parentheses
4. The English definition.
5. The names of the signs in the Gardiner classification system, enclosed in braces.

For example:

  [qAi] (v. infinitive) be raised on high, uplifted {A28 X1}

This dictionary entry is for the infinitive verb pronounced “qAi” (approximately “KA-ee”) meaning to be uplifted, made up of the two signs A28 (standing man with both arms raised) and X1 (bread loaf).
